

What to Expect in V2

Verato v1 proved the core idea. AI reads your meeting transcripts, extracts every commitment, tracks risk, and nudges owners before things slip. Meetings flow in automatically from Google Meet and Zoom. Slack and Gmail replies are parsed automatically. Strategic Initiatives give you a health view across themes. The risk score tells you exactly why something is at risk.

V2 is about intelligence, not plumbing. The pipeline is built. Now Verato needs to go deeper — reading between the lines of what owners say, identifying which teams are structurally behind, and pulling in every meeting source your organisation uses.

1. Verato Tells You Why Something Is Slipping

A date change is not the same as a blockade. When an owner replies saying "I'm still waiting on John's team to hand over the API keys," Verato will flag this as a Cross-Functional Blockade — highlight it on the dashboard, name the blocking team, and surface it to the CoS as something requiring their intervention.

This is the difference between tracking commitments and managing the politics around them.

2. Department Health and Commitment Debt

V1 shows delivery rates per individual. V2 will aggregate this into a Department Health view — which teams are consistently hitting deadlines and which are bottlenecked, across the last 2 weeks, month, and quarter.

It will also track Commitment Debt: if a VP consistently extends every deadline by 2 days, week after week, Verato flags them as a chronic under-estimator. This gives the CoS the context to adjust timelines in planning, not in the debrief.

3. More Meeting Sources

Google Meet and Zoom are already connected. V2 extends this to tl;dv, Fathom, Granola, and Microsoft Teams. Connect once and every meeting, regardless of platform, flows into Verato automatically.

The Bigger Picture

V1 gave you a commitment tracker that removes the manual work. V2 gives you a CoS command centre that removes the guesswork.

By the end of V2, Verato should feel like a Chief of Staff's second brain — one that attends every meeting silently, remembers every promise, reads between the lines of every reply, and puts only the decisions that genuinely need human judgement in front of you.

Verato V2 — In Progress